

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA : NO.: 3:CR-16-152

VS. : (Judge Munley)

JOSIAH FERREBEE,
Defendant :

RESPONSE IN OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO SUPPRESS STATEMENTS AND PHYSICAL EVIDENCE

A. Statement of the Facts

On February 11, 2016, D.M., age 15, was interviewed by Detective Ritter of the Grand Traverse County Sheriff's Office in Michigan. D.M. advised Detective Ritter that she was home on January 26, 2016, in her living room sitting on the couch when she received a message from somebody that she does not know named "jokester". D.M. did not remember the full user name, but did remember the title--"killing myself". D.M. stated that during the conversation, the person was asking her to take photos of herself, which she did. D.M. advised that she gave him information about herself and he threatened to post it if she did not give more information or send pictures. D.M. stated that while she was inside the bathroom, she did take photos of herself without her clothes on, including photos of her breasts and vagina.

D.M. also stated that the individual wanted her to do certain things to herself, which included using scissors to cut herself, and she complied with the request.

Forensic analysis of D.M.'s Apple iPod that was utilized to have this conversation revealed images of D.M. that she took of herself and sent to the individual utilizing the name "killing myself". These photos of D.M. included images of herself with no clothes on and images of her vagina and bare breasts. The conversations between D.M. and "killing myself" started on January 26, 2016 at 18:34 hours Eastern Standard Time and ended on January 26, 2016 at 20:14 hours Eastern Standard Time. Agents reviewed the thread of text messages as well as the images "killing myself" instructed D.M. to send and discovered several images depicting child pornography. Among those are the following text messages and images:

On June 2, 2016, after the execution of a search warrant at the defendant's residence in Schuylkill County when the defendant was not present, Homeland Security Investigation (HSI) agents traveled to the Twin Grove Campground, the defendant's place of employment. There, they met with the defendant in order to attempt to interview him.

The meeting with Ferree took place within a common activities room within the main office of the campground. HSI Agents Murray and Cerminaro interviewed the defendant. They expressly advised Ferree that he was not under arrest and was free to leave at any time. Ferree voluntarily agreed to be interviewed.

During the interview, HSI agents did not display their firearms (both agents' firearms were concealed under their shirts), did not use hostile tones of voice, and did not physically restrain Ferree in any manner. The interview lasted approximately 45 minutes. Ferree was seated comfortably on a couch, and agents on a few occasions left Ferree alone sitting on the couch.

During the interview, Ferree admitted that he used the Kik Messenger user account JOKESTER760 from 2015 through 2016; that he talked with others about sexual subjects on the Kik Messenger, including girls as young as 14; that he asked young girls to perform sexual acts on themselves, take photos of the sex acts, and send the photos to him; that he made demands on the girls and threatened to post embarrassing things about them online if they did not do what he demanded; that he was “addicted” to having these conversations with young girls and would begin the conversations by telling them he was going to harm himself; and that in January 2016, he had a conversation with a teenage girl and demanded that she take explicit sexual photos of herself while performing sex acts, and threatened to post things online about her if she resisted.

Ferrebee subsequently signed a consent to search form, allowing agents to conduct a forensic exam on his iPhone 5. (See attached Exhibit 1). He also consented in writing to undergo a polygraph examination at the Pennsylvania State Police Jonestown Barracks later that same day. (See attached Exhibit 2). Agents suggested to Ferrebee that he get something to eat prior to the polygraph examination, and the interview was terminated.

Ferrebee also signed a written consent form to enable agents to assume his online presence, manifesting his willingness to cooperate with agents, (See attached Exhibit 3), and signed a consent to search form allowing agents to search his thumbdrives. (See attached Exhibit 4).

Ferrebee also signed a Miranda rights waiver form prior to conducting the polygraph examination. (See attached Exhibit 5). After signing that form and waiving those rights, Ferrebee admitted the following: in January 2016, Ferrebee went online with a stranger and demanded pictures of a sexual nature, and threatened the person that he would post embarrassing information online if the person did not provide the pictures; he asked the age of the person and said that he knew that a 15-year-old would be more susceptible than a 25-year-old to his demands and threats; that he used the Jokester760 Kik account in the January sexual conversation; he identified himself as the person who conversed with D.M. in the January 26, 2016 conversation and initialed/signed each page of the transcript of that conversation; he utilized his current iPhone to talk to people on Kik; he was sexually aroused by the pictures that the girl sent to him and masturbated to some of them; he spoke to about 4-6 girls under the age of 18 and directed them to take pictures of themselves that were sexual in nature; he started engaging in this conduct about a month prior to the January conversation with D.M.; the youngest images of child pornography he has seen were of boys and girls approximately 14-15 years old; about 7-8 people on Kik sent him naked pictures of themselves, but he only directed 4-6 of those to take the photos and send them to him; he has talked to children as young as 13 on Kik.

On June 3, 2016, Ferrebee was arrested via a criminal complaint and charged with online enticement and production of child pornography. On June 14, 2016, Ferrebee was indicted by a federal grand jury on charges of production and attempted production of child pornography, 18 U.S.C. Section 2251(a) and (e), and using a facility of interstate commerce to persuade, induce, entice, or coerce a minor to engage in any sexual activity for which any person can be charged with a crime, 18 U.S.C. Section 2422(b).

The defendant subsequently filed the instant motion to suppress statements and physical evidence. He contends that he was in custody at the time he made his un-Mirandized statements to agents at the campground; that he subsequently did not voluntarily waive his Miranda rights when interviewed at the Pennsylvania State Police Barracks; and that the statements were otherwise not voluntary.

He also contends that the search of his iPhone was illegal because agents did not obtain a search warrant and/or his consent to the search was not voluntary.

B. Argument

1. The Defendant Was Not in Custody During the Campground Interview

The Third Circuit Court has explained the legal principles that apply in determining whether a person was in police custody and thereby entitled to receive Miranda warnings prior to being interrogated:

A person is in custody when he either is arrested formally or his freedom of movement is restricted to “the degree associated with a formal arrest.” Id. at 743 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). For a person to be in custody when he has not been arrested, “something must be said or done by the authorities, either in their manner of approach or in the tone or extent of their questioning, which indicates that they would not have heeded a request to depart or to allow the suspect to do so.” Steigler v. Anderson, 496 F.2d 793, 799 (3d Cir.1974) (quoting United States v. Hall, 421 F.2d 540, 545 (2d Cir.1969)). Thus, “police officers are not required to administer Miranda warnings to everyone whom they question.” Oregon v. Mathiason, 429 U.S. 492, 495, 97 S.Ct. 711, 714, 50 L.Ed.2d 714 (1977). Miranda, of course, requires warnings only when the person the police are questioning is in custody. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 468, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 1624, 16 L.Ed.2d 694 (1966).

United States v. Willaman, 437 F.3d 354, 359–60 (3d Cir. 2006); United States v. McNeil, 416 Fed. Appx. 227, 228-29 (3d Cir. 2011) (not precedential). Furthermore, it is the objective circumstances of the interview, not the subjective views of the police or the person interviewed, that govern the determination of custody in a given case. Stansbury v. California, 511 U.S. 318, 323 (1994); United States v. McKinney, 695 F.Supp. 2d 182, 188-89 (E.D. Pa. 2010). The question is whether a reasonable person in the suspect's situation would feel free to end the questioning and leave. United States v. Jacobs, 431 F.3d 99, 105 (3d Cir. 2005); United States v. Morgan, 562 Fed. Appx. 123, 129-30 (3d Cir. 2014). To answer that question, the Third Circuit looks at the following factors:

(1) whether the officers told the suspect he was under arrest or free to leave; (2) the location or physical surroundings of the interrogation; (3) the length of the interrogation; (4) whether the officers used coercive tactics such as hostile tones of voice, the display of weapons, or physical restraint of the suspect's movement; and (5) whether the suspect voluntarily submitted to questioning. See United States v. Czichray, 378 F.3d 822, 827 (8th Cir.2004); United States v. Hayden, 260 F.3d 1062, 1066 (9th Cir.2001); United States v. Crossley, 224 F.3d 847, 861 (6th Cir.2000).

McNeil, 416 Fed. Appx. at 228-29.

Here, after agents met with Ferreebee at the campground, they expressly informed him that he was not under arrest and was free to leave their presence at any time. The location of the interview was within an office at Ferreebee's workplace, not at a law enforcement venue. The interview lasted approximately 45 minutes, and agents at times left the suspect alone on a comfortable couch. There were no coercive tactics used by the agents: the tone of their questioning was not hostile, the agents did not display their firearms (the guns were concealed under the agents' shirts and thus not visible to Ferreebee), and there was no physical restraint on Ferreebee's movement. Moreover, it is clear that Ferreebee voluntarily submitted to questioning: he was cooperative throughout his interactions with the agents, consenting to a search of his iPhone, permitting agents to assume his online presence in an effort to cooperate, consenting to a polygraph examination, and later voluntarily traveling by himself to the state police barracks for the polygraph, and voluntarily waiving his Miranda rights at the barracks, and leaving by himself after the interview and polygraph .

In short, nothing was said or done by the agents which indicated that they would not have heeded a request to depart or allow Ferree to do so. United States v. Willaman, 437 F.3d at 359. Here, the totality of circumstances show that Ferree's freedom was not restrained at all, let alone to a degree associated with a formal arrest. Oregon v. Mathiason, 429 U.S. 492 (1977) (defendant not in custody where he came to the police station voluntarily, was informed that he was not under arrest, and left the interview without hindrance); United States v. King, 604 F.3d 125, 138–39 (3d Cir. 2010) (defendant not in custody at FBI office interview when he was expressly told he was not under arrest, could have exited the office at any time, and there was no evidence that agents used coercive tactics); United States v. Arena, 629 Fed. Appx. 453, 457 (3d Cir. 2015) (not precedential); United States v. Morgan, supra (suspect not in custody where two-hour interview conducted at suspect's workplace, no display of weapons or hostile tactics by agents, and suspect was told he was free to leave at any time); United States v. Killingsworth, 118 Fed. Appx. 649, 650–52 (3d Cir. 2004) (not precedential); United States v. Rodriguez, No. 1:09-CR-

00219, 2010 WL 1485704, at *6–8 (M.D. Pa. Apr. 12, 2010). Ferreebee was not in custody and his statements to police at the campground should not be suppressed.

2. Ferreebee Voluntarily Waived his Miranda Rights at the State Police Barracks

The defendant next claims that his signed waiver of Miranda rights at the state police barracks was not voluntary. This claim, too, is meritless.

On June 2, 2016, after the initial non-custodial interview at his workplace during which Ferreebee voluntarily agreed to cooperate with agents by allowing them to assume his online presence and voluntarily agreed to take a polygraph later in the day at the state police barracks, Ferreebee traveled by himself to the state police barracks and met with agents and the polygrapher. There, he was provided with a written copy of his Miranda warnings and waiver of rights form, which he read and signed. After voluntarily waiving his Miranda rights, Ferreebee made additional incriminating statements to agents about his online conversation via the Kik Messenger with D.M., including his admission that he asked D.M. to take pornographic photos of herself and send them to him, and threatened to post embarrassing things about her online if she did not do as he said. He also admitted to engaging in similar conduct with four-to-six girls under age 18.

Ferrebee in essence contends that the circumstances of his campground interview discussed above rendered his subsequent Mirandized statement at the state police barracks involuntary, claiming it is the “fruit of the poisonous tree.” As noted above, however, Ferrebee’s statement to agents at the campground was made in a non-custodial setting and was clearly voluntary when viewed in the totality of the circumstances. No Miranda warnings were required.

Assuming that Miranda warnings were required at the initial interview at the campground, Ferrebee’s second interview at the state police barracks, which was preceded by a signed waiver of his Miranda rights, should not be suppressed as “fruit of the poisonous tree.”

The defendant cites Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600 (2004) to support his “fruit of the poisonous tree” argument for suppression of the statement made at the state police barracks. As the Third Circuit Court explained in United States v. Kiam, 432 F.3d 524, 531-33 (3d Cir. 2006), Seibert involved an “official, widespread police protocol which directed officers to interrogate suspects extensively without Miranda warnings, obtain a confession—which the officers knew could not be used in court—then adjourn briefly, return and give the suspect his Miranda rights, and re-elicite a now-valid confession.” Id. A plurality of the Supreme Court in Seibert applied a five-part test to decide the admissibility of a second confession given after a pre-Miranda admission in that case. Justice Kennedy’s concurring opinion in Seibert, however, suggested a two-part test, which the Third Circuit has adopted. Kiam, 432 F.3d at 532.

Under Kiam, the court must first decide whether agents made a deliberate choice to flout Miranda during the initial interview. If they did not, that ends the inquiry and the pre-Miranda statement is admissible “absent coercion or improper tactics in obtaining the initial statement.” Kiam, supra at 531, quoting Oregon v. Elstad, 470 U.S. 298, 314 (1985). If agents did deliberately flout Miranda, the subsequent Mirandized statement is still admissible if “curative” measures were taken by agents.

Here, there is no allegation that agents deliberately flouted Miranda during the first interview. Instead, agents arrived at the campground (Ferrebee's workplace), informed him that he was not under arrest and was free to leave at any time, and Ferrebee voluntarily agreed to be interviewed. The interview took place in a campground office and agents were not hostile, threatening, or physically restraining toward Ferrebee. Under the holdings and reasoning of Elstad and Kiam, Ferrebee's Mirandized statement at the state police barracks is admissible, even if his first statement at the campground was made in violation of Miranda.

3. Ferrebee's Statements Were Voluntary

Ferrebee also generally alleges that both statements were involuntary and should be suppressed. In determining whether a suspect's statements were voluntary, courts look to the totality of circumstances to see if agents obtained the statements by overbearing the will of the suspect. Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 226

(1973). In determining whether a suspect's will was overborne, courts assess the details of the interrogation and the characteristics of the accused. United States v. Montgomery, 403 Fed. Appx. 674, 676 (3d Cir. 2010) (not precedential).

As noted above, the circumstances of the first statement at the campground clearly show that it was a voluntary statement, made without threats, coercion, or deception on the part of federal agents. See United States v. Hallford, 816 F.3d 850, 858-59 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (statements voluntary where defendant not pressured, interview occurred in non-police dominated atmosphere, agents asked straightforward questions and were not hostile, and no threats or promises made); United States v. Umana, 750 F.3d 320, 345 (4th Cir. 2014); United States v. Heller, 551 F.3d 1108, 1112-13 (9th Cir. 2009).

With regard to the second, Mirandized statement made at the state police barracks later that same day, those circumstances, too, show that it was a voluntary. The Third Circuit has explained that,

[a] defendant may waive his Miranda rights if the waiver is made knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694 (1966). Two factors affect this determination: First, the relinquishment of the right must have been voluntary in the sense that it was the product of a free and deliberate choice rather than intimidation, coercion, or deception. Second, the waiver must have been made with a full awareness of both the nature of the right being abandoned and the consequences of the decision to abandon it. Only if the “totality of the circumstances surrounding the interrogation” reveal both an uncoerced choice and the requisite level of comprehension may a court properly conclude that the Miranda rights have been waived. Moran v. Burbine, 475 U.S. 412, 421, 106 S.Ct. 1135, 89 L.Ed.2d 410 (1986).

United States v. Pruden, 398 F.3d 241, 246 (3d Cir. 2005); United States v. Richardson, 265 Fed. Appx. 52, 55 (3d Cir. 2008).

Here, as noted above, Ferreebee traveled on his own to the state police barracks for the interview and polygraph. He voluntarily signed a standard waiver of Miranda rights and voluntarily spoke to agents and the polygrapher. “[T]here is no evidence in the record that law enforcement officials coerced or deceived him in order to obtain a waiver of his Fifth Amendment rights.” United States v. Richardson, supra at 55.

With respect to the characteristics of the accused, in Richardson, the Third Circuit upheld the validity of a Miranda waiver and voluntariness of a confession where the defendant had a low I.Q., learning disabilities, and attended special education classes. Here, Ferrebee, as noted in his brief, is of average intelligence, has good health (other than Type-1 diabetes, which he controls by taking insulin and dieting), has never been prescribed any psychotropic medication, has no history of substance abuse, and is employed at the aforementioned campground. He answered the agents' questions intelligently. He indicated in writing that he understood his Miranda rights and was willing to speak to agents without an attorney. There is no allegation that agents threatened him or pressured him to waive his rights. Ferrebee's statements were voluntary.

4. Ferrebee's Consent to Search the iPhone and Other Devices was Voluntary

Ferrebee also claims that he did not voluntarily consent to the search of his iPhone and thumb drives. He claims that the facts surrounding his interviews and statements noted above show that his consent was not freely and voluntarily given.

The Third Circuit Court has set forth the legal principles governing consent searches and the analysis courts must use to determine whether a defendant's consent to search was voluntary:

“It is ... well settled that one of the specifically established exceptions to the requirements of both a warrant and probable cause is a search that is conducted pursuant to consent.” Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 219, 93 S.Ct. 2041, 36 L.Ed.2d 854 (1973). The Supreme Court has “long approved consensual searches because it is no doubt reasonable for the police to conduct a search once they have been permitted to do so.” Jimeno, 500 U.S. at 250–51, 111 S.Ct. 1801.

To justify a search based on consent, the Government “has the burden of proving that the consent was, in fact, freely and voluntarily given.” Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543, 548, 88 S.Ct. 1788, 20 L.Ed.2d 797 (1968). This burden “is not satisfied by showing a mere submission to a claim of lawful authority.” Florida v. Royer, 460 U.S. 491, 497, 103 S.Ct. 1319, 75 L.Ed.2d 229 (1983).

There is “no talismanic definition of ‘voluntariness,’ mechanically applicable to the host of situations where the question has arisen.” Schneckloth, 412 U.S. at 224, 93 S.Ct. 2041. Instead, we determine the voluntariness of a consent by examining the totality of the circumstances. See id. at 227, 93 S.Ct. 2041.

Both “the characteristics of the accused and the details of the interrogation” are useful to determine whether, under all the circumstances, a consent to search was voluntary, and no case should “turn[ ] on the presence or absence of a single controlling criterion.”<sup>6</sup> Id. at 226, 93 S.Ct. 2041.

Factors to consider include: the age, education, and intelligence of the subject; whether the subject was advised of his or her constitutional rights; the length of the encounter; the repetition or duration of the questioning; and the use of physical punishment. See id.; see also United States v. Kim, 27 F.3d 947, 955 (3d Cir.1994). We have further identified as relevant “the setting in which the consent was obtained [and] the parties' verbal and non-verbal actions.” United States v. Givan, 320 F.3d 452, 459 (3d Cir.2003).

United States v. Price, 558 F.3d 270, 277–79 (3d Cir. 2009). Moreover, consent to search may be express or implied, and need not be knowing or intelligent, and may be given unintentionally and without the knowledge of the right to refuse consent. United States v. Lockett, 406 F.3d 207, 211 (3d Cir. 2005).

The nature of the agents’ interaction with Ferrebee, as well as his personal characteristics, have been described above. The consent to search forms signed by Ferrebee informed him of his right to refuse to consent to the searches, stated his understanding that anything discovered by agents in the search could be used against him in a criminal proceeding, and acknowledged that he was consenting freely and voluntarily, and stated that his consent to the searches was not the result of any promises, threats, coercion, or intimidation.

Here, the totality of the circumstances, including the signed consent forms, show that Ferrebee’s consent was voluntary. See United States v. Brown, 627 Fed. Appx. 163, 166–67 (3d Cir. 2015) (not precedential); United States v. Martinez, 460 Fed. Appx. 190, 194 (3d Cir. 2012) (not precedential); United States v. Hernandez, 76 F. Supp. 2d 578, 581 (E.D. Pa. 1999) (finding voluntary consent where defendant signed a consent form explaining the police do not have a warrant and there is a constitutional right to refuse permission to search), aff'd, 263 F.3d 160 (3d Cir. 2001); United States v. Baer, No. CR 15-417, 2016 WL 4718214, at *6 (D.N.J. Sept. 9, 2016). Ferrebee's motion should be denied.

Respectfully submitted,
